MEMOIRS OF THE LIFE OF THE
REV. RICHARD SOUTHGATE.

THERE is a disposition in the human mind, which leads us to inquire, with some avidity, into the Lives and Characters of those who have raised, in an eminent degree, either the esteem or admiration of their Friends or Country.

Although the life of a truly good and pious man, whose days were uniformly spent in the regular discharge of professional duty, may convey much less entertainment to the generality of readers, than the exploits of an Hero, the descriptions of a Traveller, or even the adventures of a Highwayman; yet there is something in a good man so amiable and meritorious, that every circumstance of his life is eagerly treasured up in the breasts of those, who have possessed either the happiness of his acquaintance or the honour of his confidence. If there ever were a man whose learning and knowledge, whose goodness of heart, sweetness and evenness ness of temper, piety and charity, merited more than common regard from his Friends, it was the person, the Memoirs of whose Life make the subject of the following pages.

RICHARD SOUTHGATE was born at Alwalton, in Huntingdonshire, the 16th of March, 1729. He was the son of William Southgate, a considerable farmer of that place, and of Hannah, the daughter of Robert Wright, of Castor, in Northamptonshire, a man much esteemed, at that time, as a Surveyor and Engineer, and was principally concerned in conducting the navigable canal, that was carried from Alwalton to Thrapston in Northamptonshire. Richard was the eldest of ten children, three of whom died in early infancy, and all the rest have survived him.

He received the rudiments of his education at a private school at Uppingham. Hence he was removed to Fotheringay, and placed under the care of the Rev. Mr. Morgan; where he began to display some early instances of that retentive memory and turn for study which characterized his future life. At this place he did not remain long, but was sent to the free Grammar School at Peterborough, then superintended by the Rev. Mr. Thomas Marshall, a good man and an excellent scholar, under whom he acquired a considerable knowledge of the Greek and Roman classics.

The agreeable mildness of his disposition, and the extreme eagerness and facility with which he surmounted every difficulty in the progress of his studies, strongly recommended him to the notice of his master, with whose friendship and correspondence he was afterwards honoured when he quitted school; and this intimacy was not terminated till the death of Mr. Marshall,* which happened October 3, 1748. This person

* He was educated at Christ Church, Cambridge, took his degree of A. B. 1716, A. M. 1721. Beside the free Grammar School, he had the Vicarage of St. John the Baptist, at Peterborough, and was a minor Canon of the Cathedral, person united to great learning a peculiar suavity of manners, which early gained him the affection of his young pupil, who never neglected his admonitions or disputed his authority.

Obedience to superiors was a virtue which Mr. Southgate always endeavoured to inculcate in the minds of young people. He was of opinion that the discipline of a school should be as strict as the discipline of an army; that scholars should not be, in any case, the judges of their master's conduct; that they should obey every command, which he might think proper to impose, without any investigation of its propriety; it was the province of the master, he often said, to command, and the duty of the scholar to obey.

Corporal punishment of boys in the upper classes, he always thought indelicate, and therefore improper: that impositions of Greek and Latin exercises, or repeating a certain number of lines from memory might universally be substituted.

The rapidity of his acquisitions and the tenacity of his memory, had at this early period gained him the esteem of many respectable persons, amongst whom was Dr. John Thomas, Bishop of Lincoln, an intimate friend of his father. Under the patronage of this prelate, and with an exhibition from Peterborough, he removed to Cambridge, where he was entered at St. John's College, 1745, under Mr. Rutherford,* to whom he

* Afterwards Dr. Rutherford, he died Oct. 5, 1771; he took his degree of A. B. 1729. A. M. 1733, S. T. B. 1740, and S. T. P. 1745. He was Rector of Barrow in Suffolk, and of Brinkley in Cambridgeshire, Archdeacon of Essex, and Regius professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge. He was Author of the following Tracts:

1. Essay on the Nature and Obligation of Virtue, 4to. 1744.
2. Sermon preached before the House of Commons, 30th of January, 1746, 4to.

3. Determinatio questionis Theologicæ in qua ostenditur immolationem Isaac non fuisse actionem scenicam quæ mortem he was recommended with great encomiums and warmth by his friend and late master, Mr. Marshall.

Mr. Christi repræsentaret, 4to. 1746. This was for his Doctor's degree.

4. Two Sermons preached before the University, May 29, and June 11, 1747, 4to.

5. A System of Natural Philosophy, being a Course of Lectures in Mechanics, Optics, Hydrostatics, and Astronomy, which are read in St. John's College, Cambridge, 2 vols. 4to. 1748.

17. A Second Vindication of the Right of Protestant Churches to require the Clergy to subscribe to an established Confession of Faith and Doctrines, in a Letter to the Examiner of the First, 8vo. 1767.

18. A Defence of a Charge concerning Subscriptions, in a Letter to the Author of the Confessional, 8vo. 1767.

19. A Sermon before the Governors of Addenbrook Hospital, June 27, 1771, 4to.

Mr. Southgate frequently mentioned that the happiest hours of his life were passed at College: he was here suffered to follow, without restraint, the bent of his inclinations, and as his mind burnt with ardour for the acquirement of knowledge, so his studies were prosecuted with vigour. He lived in a retired manner, and intense application seldom permitted him to associate, even with the very few friends whom he had selected.

His finances were small, but having no pride, very little ambition, and great prudence, he was able, even at that time, to begin his collections of Books and Coins, and though what he bought of the latter were of little value, yet so nice was his taste, that he never purchased any which were not in the highest preservation and perfection.

His Poetical compositions, he often confessed, were rugged and inharmonious; but though he never attained any eminence as a Poet, yet he was a great admirer of poetry, and continued to read it, to the end of his life, with the highest pleasure. What Trapp said of Statius may with equal propriety be said of Southgate:

Maronem admiratum potius fuisse quam imitatum.

Logick engaged his attention more than mathematick yet he derived assistance from both, united correctness with pertinency, and was most certainly an excellent judge of composition.

He took his degree of Bachelor of Arts in Easter Term, 1749.

From his attention to study and his extreme diffidence, the extent of his knowledge was for some time little known beyond the small circle of his friends, but as his virtues and abilities became, gradually, more noticed, in the same proportion he became more generally admired and esteemed.

Mr. Southgate found a College life so suitable to the turn of his mind, that he formed the pleasing hope of being able to

to continue it ; but such is the condition of all human affairs, that what a man has most at heart, and seems, as it were, to have nearly in his possession, is often, by some unforeseen accident, destroyed, and all the fancied prospects, on which his imagination had dwelt with pleasure, are in an instant vanished.

This was the case with Mr. Southgate ; who, when he had been little more than four years at College, and had not obtained any fellowship to enable him to stay, was obliged, from some occurrences in his family of an unpleasant nature, to quit the University ; which he left with such reluctance and regret, that nothing, but the calm religious philosophy which ever after marked his character, could have supported him under so great a disappointment.

He now retired to his father's house at Alwalton, where, by the assistance of books from the library of Dr. Neve, who was Rector of the Parish and a friend of his father, he was enabled to continue his studies.

On the 24th of September, 1752, he was ordained Deacon, at Bugden, by his friend and patron Dr. Thomas, Bishop of Lincoln, by whom he was afterwards ordained Priest, the 22d. of September, 1754. On the 8th of November in the same year he was presented, by Bishop Thomas, to the Rectory of Woolley, in the County of Huntingdon, worth about one hundred and twenty pounds per annum.

The circumstances attending this preferment I think worthy of being mentioned.

This living became vacant during the minority of Mr. Peacock, who was the Patron, and was himself intended for the church. His guardians, not being able to agree as to the person they should present, suffered it to lapse to the Bishop, who mentioned these circumstances to Mr. Southgate when he presented him to the living, but the Bishop left him entirely clear of any promise or restraint respecting it it. It was unnecessary. As soon as Mr. Peacock had taken Priests orders, Mr. Southgate went to the Bishop and resigned the living. During the time he held it, he had to rebuild a considerable part of the premises, and to make such repairs, that he may be said rather to have acted like a faithful steward to Mr. Peacock than the real Rector of the parish; so that when he resigned it, after having held it more than five years, he had not saved out of the income one shilling. The Bishop on his resignation said, "You have done, Richard, what I knew you would do; you have behaved like a Christian and a good man, and I have this additional motive for thinking myself bound to provide for you."

Dr. Thomas, when he said this, sincerely meant what he said, but though a good tempered man, and a worthy man, he had his failings. He was pleased with the company of persons of rank, and had not firmness of mind sufficient to refuse what a great man asked as a favor. One living fell, a lord asked for it, and had it; another living in his presentation became vacant, and the same thing happened through an earl or a duke; and thus one opportunity after another was suffered to pass by, and the Bishop died on July 19, 1766, without ever having fulfilled his promise to Mr. Southgate; notwithstanding the Bishop lived upwards of five years after Mr. Southgate resigned the Rectory of Woolley; and nearly as long after he was translated to the See of Salisbury, and was made a Canon residentiary of St. Paul's.

Mr. Southgate received the news with the utmost composure, and never once shewed the least sign of disappointment; he regretted rather the death of a friend, than the loss of a patron. For the infringement of the promise he pleaded much in extenuation, and attributed it to a constitutional weakness which too easily yielded to the incessant requests of the importunate or the powerful solicitations of the great.

In

In the country he successively served the following curacies :

Upton and Leighton-Bromswold, Huntingdonshire.

Weston and Wykeham, in Lincolnshire.

Caverney and Mance, Cambridgeshire.

Godmanchester, Huntingdonshire.

Louth, Rathby, Tathwell, and Cawkwell, Lincolnshire.

And Doddington and Newnham, Kent.

During the time he served the above cures, he was frequently in the habit of reading prayers and preaching at three different churches : and I see in his Journal that he not unfrequently served four different churches in one day.

He now much regretted his having been obliged to leave College, as he found the want of books and persons of literature to converse with, were insurmountable obstacles to his improvement in knowledge : and he had to lament that small country villages could not supply these : on which account he formed the resolution of coming to London. Accordingly on the 2d of January, 1763, he quitted the curacy of Doddington and Newnham, and having received from Dr. Thomas, then Bishop of Salisbury, a recommendation to Dr. Nicolls of St. James's, Westminster, he came to London. He was received by Dr. Nicolls in the most polite and even friendly manner, and was immediately engaged as one of the sub-curates of St. James's ; on which office he entered January 9, 1763.—Dr. Nicolls, dying the 18th of November following, was succeeded by Dr. Parker, the present Rector, to whom Bishop Thomas also spoke in favour of Mr. Southgate.

He continued to serve this cure till 1766, during which time he received every mark of attention and esteem from Dr. Parker, with whom he, ever after, was in habits of intimacy and friendship.

On the 25th of December, 1765, he entered upon the curacy of St. Giles's, to which he was appointed by the Rev.

Dr. Gally, on the recommendation of his Friend Dr. Parker.

Mr. Southgate's turn for Greek Literature soon recommended him to the particular notice and esteem of this very learned Dignitary,* with whom he continued in habits of the greatest friendship till the 7th of July, 1769, when the Doctor died to the great grief of all his friends, and particularly of Mr. Southgate, to whom the Doctor left a legacy of fifty pounds.

Dr. Gally, sometime before his death, finding his health considerably decline, from his great regard for Mr. Southgate, desired him to get licensed for his cure, that he might, if he chose to continue in it, be left to the will or caprice of any future Rector, and he was accordingly licensed to this cure the 10th of March, 1769, at 50 guineas per annum.

This last cure he continued to serve till the time of his death, which nearly completed a period of 30 years.

In February 1771, he received a considerable shock by the death of his father, and on the 9th of February in the following year, he had the misfortune to lose his mother. From his resolution to submit without murmuring to all the decrees of providence, he did not express his concern upon these occasions as persons usually do: but it cast a thoughtful melancholy gloom over his countenance, and damped the cheerfulness of his usual behaviour for some time.

From the time of his coming to London to the year 1783, though he had very little more than the profits of his curacy, yet so great was his economy that he had made a very considerable collection of books, and had got together no inconsiderable number of coins and medals. But to encrease his income

* He received his education at Christ Church College, Cambridge, to his degree of A. B. 1717, A. M. 1721, S. T. P. 1728, was Rector of St. Giles's, Prebendary of Gloucester and Norwich, and author of 2 Dissertations on the Greek Accents and quantity, 8 vo. 1755—63.

come and to assist him in this, he had several times, young gentlemen under his care, with whom he read the Greek and Roman Classics.

His virtues and talents had by this time been able to penetrate through the obscurity which his own diffidence and modesty had thrown over them, he had become acquainted not only with men of the first character for science and literature, but with many persons of fortune and rank, amongst whom were the Duke of Ancaster, Lord Willoughby, Lord Camden, Lord Bathurst, &c. to the two last he was strongly recommended, yet as his natural diffidence prevented him from having the courage to solicit preferment, he had not hitherto the good fortune to receive it.

On the 24th of May, 1783, he was presented by his Grace the Duke of Ancaster, at the request of the Dutches, to whom he had been long known, to the small Rectory of Little Steeping, in Lincolnshire, and on the 6th of September, 1784, he was appointed assistant Librarian to the British Museum; which place had become vacant by the death of Dr. Gifford on the 19th of the preceeding June. This preferment he owed to the application of Dr. Parker, and several other friends, as he himself could not be prevailed upon to apply personally.

Mr. Southgate now began to find himself in tolerably easy circumstances, and by the death of a relation in 1786, he became heir to an estate of one hundred pounds a year in Whitechapel. This addition to his income allowed him to indulge his inclination for buying books and coins in a manner more suitable to his taste; for though he never bought any books but of the best edition, and in good condition, yet they were confined to the more useful and least expensive. Now, being long accustomed to habits of economy which he ever retained, he was able to purchase the more ornamental and expensive.

Mr.

Mr. Southgate had toiled many years without any other reward than the consciousness of having filled the station of life in which Providence had placed him, with the strictest integrity and punctuality, and of having done as much good as his situation in life would enable him.

But Providence, having tried him for many years, as a reward for his labour and integrity made the latter part of his life as comfortable as his age and infirmities would admit.

On the 11th of May, 1790, he was presented by John Gally, Knight of Langold, Esq. son of his old friend Dr. Gally, to the valuable living of Warfop, in the Diocese of York, and county of Nottingham, which became vacant by the death of the Right Rev. Dr. Samuel Halifax*, Bishop of St. Asaph, Mr. Knight's Tutor at College.

* He was originally of Jesus College, Cambridge, but in April 1760, he was chose Fellow of Trinity Hall: he took his degree of A. B. 1754, A. M. 1757, L. L. D. 1764, and S. T. P. 1775. In March, 1760, he was appointed Professor of Divinity in Gresham College. In November, 1765, he was presented to the Rectory of Chaddington, in Buckinghamshire. In February, 1768, he was elected Professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge, which he resigned on being appointed Regius Professor of Civil Law; he was made Chaplain to his Majesty in February 1774, presented to the valuable Rectory of Warfop, 17 ; on the Death of Dr. Topham he succeeded to the Mastership of the Faculties in Doctors Commons; was advanced to the See of Gloucester, November, 1781; and on the Death of Bishop Shipley he was translated to the See of St. Asaph, and died the 5th of March, 1790.

He was Author of the following works;

1. Saint Paul's Doctrine of Justification by Faith explained, in three Discourses, preached before the University of Cambridge, 8vo. 1760.

2. Two Sermons preached before the University of Cambridge in 1768:—the one upon the 30th of October, being the Commemoration of Benefactors to the University; the other on the 30th of November following, 4to. 1769.

3. A Sermon before the House of Commons, Jan. 30, 1769, 4to.

Though I neither know nor am known to Mr. Knight, I cannot avoid adding a few lines in acknowledgement for his disinterested liberality on this occasion ;—deaf to the solicitations of the great and the importunities of his friends, he bestowed this valuable living on the man whose modesty and diffidence he knew would not suffer him to ask it, but whose virtues and merits he had long esteemed. Every friend of Mr. Southgate, every lover of virtue and merit must have felt his heart glow with gratitude to this gentleman, who doth honour to the example of his father, by uniting strict integrity and great benevolence to extensive learning and knowledge. He has shewn that there still are patrons who are swayed neither by the great and powerful, by Parliamentary interest, interest, nor by mercenary considerations, but true to the trust reposed in them, bestow their Patronage on the most deserving.

Mr. Southgate was now in possession of a large income, and was able to indulge his passion for collecting to a considerable extent; and greatly to enlarge the bounds of his charity, which was before, to the poor of his parish, considering the smallness of his income and the other uses to which he applied it, much greater than could be supposed*; and since the encrease of his fortune he has given away among the poor nearly double what he received from the parish.

He was elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries in the year 1791, and was afterwards made a Member of the Linnæan Society.

Mr. Southgate had been troubled for many years with an intermittent pulse, and from frequently catching cold by standing in the open burial ground in very rainy or snowy weather, and sometimes after dark, had become subject to a Cough and Astmatick complaint, which had greatly increased for the last three years. His disease about the heart made it necessary for him to avoid very quick or sudden motions. This suited extremely well his general temper of mind: He was never known to be inflamed by passion, or too much elevated with joy, and his walking was so regular and uniform that it could hardly be called exercise. This certainly preserved him from many inconveniences which quicker motions or strong passions of the mind would have brought on, and indeed most likely would have terminated his existence some years before. Yet perhaps too little exercise assisted in bringing on considerable corpulency, which was very inconvenient to him and undoubtedly doubtedly helped to encrease his other diseases. But as he had long accustomed his mind rather to contemplate the blessings he enjoyed, than those which were denied, and was naturally of a chearful disposition, he enjoyed himself tolerably well till the hard frost at the end of the year 1794, when not being so careful as his infirmities required, he caught cold, which brought on his cough and asthmatick disorder. On the 12th of January he was obliged to confine himself to his room; the weather gradually getting more severe his complaints increased.

• He has been known, when in this situation, to take the last shirt but one from his draw and put it in his pocket to give away.

On Thursday, the 22d of January, in the afternoon, he seemed somewhat better, talked chearfully, and inquired about books and subjects which he had been accustomed to be pleased with. Some expectations were now formed of his recovery, but the weather getting colder on the Friday and Saturday he became gradually worse, and on the Sunday morning between eight and nine, when the Thermometer at Clapham common was six degrees below Zero, and in other places lower, a degree of cold hitherto unknown in this country, he lost his recollection and senses, and about half past three o'clock the same day this excellent man paid the great debt of Nature.—“Hic dolor noster, nostrum vulnus.”

A report was circulated that a number of Irish men and women not pleased with the mode of distributing the provisions and coals which were given away to the poor during the hard weather, not only jostled him, but that many struck him, which was the cause of his death. This report appeared in the Newspapers, and was repeated in an elegy that was cried about the streets. To the honor of the Parish, and to the credit of the poor, to whom he had ever been so attentive and good, no part of this is true. He never mentioned such an incident, and did not make any complaints which could be referred to such a cause. The number which were collected to receive these these benefactions were so great, that those on the outside pressed very much to get forward ; in consequence of this, I believe he, being very ill at the time, was hurried and alarmed. This certainly might have increased his complaints, but he was neither ill-treated nor abused.

In compliment to his virtues and great attention to the poor during so many years, the parish ordered St. Giles's Church to be hung with black for one month ; and his funeral sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Buckner, the present worthy Rector, for whom Mr. Southgate had the most sincere regard.

In stature Mr. Southgate was rather more than 5 feet 10 inches high, very upright, always lusty, and latterly corpulent ; and although ever active in his mind, yet slow and inactive as to his body.

The leading traits of his character were mildness of disposition and content. In situations of life where his income was not sufficient to procure him any of the luxuries, and barely what other men would call the necessaries of life, he continued without murmuring. Under the oppression of illness, and in the full vigour of health, in the days of poverty, and in the hours of affluence, the same serenity attended him : as he was never elated by prosperity, so he was never dejected by adversity.

To ambition he was a stranger : few men had more knowledge or were less assuming. He had only taken his degree of A. B. and although often pressed by his friends to go to Cambridge and take his degree of A. M. and per saltum D. D. "that cannot add," he would say, "to my enjoyments, I do not want honors : " and then would add with a smile, "be not desirous of being called by men, Rabbi."

He was a great admirer of our Constitution and Government, of which he was able to form a good judgement by comparing comparing it with the other States of Europe, with which, by reading, he was well acquainted. He did not trouble himself much about the politicks of the day. He considered himself too far removed from the candle to see clearly, and consequently had not sufficient information to judge of present measures with precision; but to the King of Kings he constantly prayed with fervency that he would avert from this country those dreadful calamities which raged among a neighbouring and distracted people; at the recapitulation of whose enormities, committed before the face of heaven and in defiance of every law, human and divine, he has often shuddered with horror and indignation.

In religion he was a most diligent and laborious Minister of the Gospel, a firm believer, and a strict observer of the doctrines he taught: yet he was very far from being a bigot. In conversation, objections being made to some parts of the 39 articles, and to parts of our Liturgy, he answered, "I myself believe all this, and if they were properly understood and allowances made for the style and mode of expression used at the time these were drawn up, there would not be those objections made to them that there are, yet as some of these are not absolutely necessary to Salvation, and great objections have been, and are still made, I shall not think it wrong to leave out such parts whenever the Bishops shall think it right to bring a Bill into Parliament for that purpose, but there is much to fear when the Laity begin to reform the Church." And he had often said he had no objection to the repeal of the Test and Corporation Acts, as he feared they were frequently the cause of the Holy Sacrament being profaned, and did not perfectly answer the purposes intended, as they only kept out the best and most conscientious dissenters.

To alleviate the helpless and to comfort the afflicted were among the most shining qualities of his mind. For these he would ould have foregone every pleasure, and would have spared neither trouble nor fortune. When he gave consolation to the afflicted, bread to the hungry, or was the means of procuring health to the sick, he afforded that sublime satisfaction to his own mind, which neither the influx of riches, nor the addition of honours, could have given him; and though of late years, on account of his health, he had provided a person to do the evening duty and to bury, yet he never would give up visiting the sick poor. His kindness and charity were not unfrequently made the dupes of dissimulation and iniquity,* but this did not in the least impede his exertions in favour of the distressed, whom he attended with a zeal and anxiety which few equal, and none surpass.

With a great stock of knowledge, he was possessed of much anecdote, and an amiable disposition; he was a sincere friend, a pleasing and instructive companion, and had the faculty of communicating information without appearing to teach. His memory was great, but not servile, for he treasured up things rather than words. He was deep, but not ready, and his diffidence ever prevailed in the company of strangers, where he was reserved and silent.

He had very much at heart, that the poor should be instructed in the religion they professed; and this he thought could not be thoroughly accomplished, unless they had a tolerable knowledge of their mother tongue; in order to promote

* Many of these cases I have known, but shall relate the following, which happened not long before his death. He was sent for to pray by a poor man and his wife who were represented to be extremely ill. Having prayed by them, and administered the kind of admonition and consolation suitable to their situation, he gave them half a crown, and said he would send an apothecary to them. In about an hour and an half, when the apothecary whom he had sent to these people on his account, got there, the man and the woman were both gone to the alehouse to spend the money which he had given them.

mote this, he was a constant subscriber to the charity school of his own parish; he was a warm promoter of a Sunday school in London, and he supported one at his living in Nottinghamshire. He went frequently to examine and instruct the children at the Philanthropic Society's house in St. George's Fields. He was a member of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, and of the Society for the support of the Widows and Orphans of the Clergy within the Bills of Mortality and in the County of Middlesex.

He has kept a regular journal from January the 1st. 1757, to within a few days before his death. This journal is merely an account of the manner in which he spent his time, and seems to have been made both with a political and moral view. First, that, if he should be at any time called upon as a witness, he might be better able to speak with precision; and secondly, that, by always recording the manner in which he spent his time, might be a check upon his own conduct.

Mr. Southgate never committed any of his writings to the press; but had he lived, the world would have received from his pen a work much wanted, and for which he was thoroughly qualified; viz. a new History of the Saxons and Danes in this country, illustrating, and illustrated by, their Coins: for which purpose he had been reading both printed books and manuscripts, and had been collecting the types and inscriptions of all the known Coins of this sort above six years: but here the world has to lament the goodness of his memory, to which he committed all that store of knowledge which he possessed, and no man ever possessed so much learning in this part of history. Had he lived, he would have rectified many errors in, and added much information to, this part of our history: but nothing now remains, but the Inscriptions of the Coins, and a very few Drawings.

Besides

Besides his knowledge of the Greek and Latin tongues, he was tolerably versed in the French and German languages, and knew sufficient of the Italian and Spanish to make out any of their Historians, or books of coins.

His knowledge of ancient and modern history was not equalled by many, and scarce any were so well acquainted with the history of the middle ages, or with the families of the small Dukedoms and Principalities of Europe. As to his medallic knowledge very few were to be compared with him, and it was from this source that his historical knowledge was so considerable, and from his mode of collecting that it was so well retained. He was well acquainted both with the early and modern English Poets as well as the Prose Writers, and was extremely well informed about the Ecclesiastical History of this country, the various religious disputes, and the characters of the persons who were principally concerned in them; and had rather more than a superficial knowledge of Natural History and the Linnæan System.

In regard to his Collections now offered to the Publick, it is sufficient to say that his Books consist of the best editions, are fine copies, are mostly in excellent condition, and many in superb bindings. His taste and choice in buying these will be better seen by those who examine the catalogue than I can express it. I shall only observe, that, of favourite Authors, he endeavoured to procure every thing they published, in order to compleat their works; and for the purpose of knowing what such authors have published this Catalogue will ever be a good book of reference.

His collection of Coins, independent of the Greek and Roman, which, though fine, are not numerous, principally consists of the following—

ANGLO-SAXON, ENGLISH, and ANGLO-GALLIC COINS, many of which are unique, and such a series of the former, so

so nearly compleat and so wonderfully preserved were never before brought to sale.

ENGLISH TOWN PIECES and TRADESMENS TOKENS. His collection of this kind is superior to any in the kingdom, and though at present no high value be set upon the latter by men of learning, there is no doubt, but a time will come, when these coins will be as much esteemed in this country, as the Town-pieces of the Greeks—Indeed the use of the names of towns, on the Anglo-Saxon and early English coins, is even now universally acknowledged.

ENGLISH and FOREIGN MEDALS. These are in the finest preservation and among them some of the greatest rarity.

PAPAL MEDALS. This series is numerous and very fine.

DOLLARS, or the large Silver Coins of different parts of the world. This collection is very large and I believe matchless in point of preservation: many are proofs, and Mr. Tho. Snelling refused for the coin of John Demetrius ten guineas, which was offered him by a foreigner who wished to take it abroad. This kind of collection has not hitherto been much sought after in this country, but on the continent it is prized beyond all other modern coins, and it was principally from this source Mr. Stuhlgate acquired and retained his knowledge of the history of Europe.

EARLY SMALL SILVER COINS of Europe. These are fine and interesting.

ASIATIC COINS, are beautiful and curious.

ARMENIAN COINS. Of these I believe there never was so large and fine a collection ever before offered to the public in any part of Europe.

It is to be lamented that for the conveniency of Sale the different sets of Coins have unavoidably been separated, but care

care has been taken to preserve as much as possible the Chronological arrangements :

In regard to the Fossils and SHELLS, it is evident from the smallness of the number, and from the deficiency in many of the Genera, that he had not been long collecting. He never intended to have formed a numerous collection of these articles ; but he wished to have a few Specimens of each of the Genera, and these the most beautiful. This accounts for the collection being so very incomplete ; but yet the Connoisseur will find many Specimens, which, for beauty and rarity, are not to be equalled in the most extensive Cabinets.

could have been taken to preserve as much as possible the Constitutional arrangements.

In regard to the President and his office, it is evident from the difficulties of the country, and the necessity in many of the States, that he had not only to be a President, but also intended to have formed a Council of Ministers of State, and these Ministers wished to have a large number of each of the States, and each the most powerful. This accounts for the election being so very unpopular; but yet the Commissioners will find many specimens, which for beauty and rarity, are not to be equalled in the most extensive Collection.
